WAX PLANT MAY BE PUT IN SANDERSON

Cattle Dipping Begins Preparatory to Shipping to Pasture.

Sander son, Tex., April 10.—Oscar Paxcia, representing the Continental Wax company, was here this week prospecting for a location for a factory to work the candle plant into wax. Candilla grows plentifully in this county and the company expects to erect several factories in this portion of the state. It is capitalized at $500,000 and is composed principally of Little Rock, Ark., business men. It gathered some of the plant while here and shipped it to Del Rio for experimental purposes.

Lightning destroyed 15 fence posts of the G. & S. A. right of way, just below town. It also struck the telephone wire running into the house occupied by F. N. Harrell, but no damage was done.

John Young, of Alpine is here to help his son John Young, Jr., to dip a bunch of stock cattle he has purchased from Simon Shaw, of Pumpville. They will be taken to range in Brewster county.

The Big Canyon Ranch company has dipped and shipped 1125 head of steers to range in Oklahoma.

H. E. Middleton, of Marfa purchased a fine yearling stallion from J. B. Harrell. He shipped him to Marfa.

John Blocker, a big ranchman, of Mexico, will begin shipping 1000 head of steers from Dryden, this county, on April 10. His ranch is just across the Rio Grande from Dryden.

Good rains have fallen over portions of this county again this week.

Rev. R. A. MacLaren Browne has returned from Galveston, where he went to meet his wife, who is moving here to join him, from New York city. Mr. Browne recently became pastor of the Presbyterian church at this place.

Thomas Corder, the young man who was injured while breaking a wild horse, died at the hospital in San Antonio, April 9.

The Mother's club gave a social at Mrs. Bodkins'.

Immigration officer Smith, of Del Rio, was here looking for a Chinaman who was unlawfully in this country.

MAX VOTE FOR SCHOOL BONDS AND DIVIDE TOYAH DISTRICT

Pecos, Tex., April 10.—A petition is being circulated asking the calling of an election for the purpose of voting on the amount of $25,000 for the erection of a new public school building.

Another petition is being circulated to have two school districts made by dividing the Toyah district. This would make Orla, Tex., a separate district. Orla at present is included in the Toyah district.

Cement sidewalk laying is again in progress. Among those hired to do the work are: a walk on the north and west sides of the courthouse square; also walks leading to the building from each of these sides; on the north and west of J. C. Prewitt's residence; south and west of Sid Cowan's; east and north of J. N. Newell's; north of J. C. Prewitt's; south and east of J. G. Love's; also on the east side of Auntie Collier's residence. Also there are walks leading from the streets to those residences.

This will only leave a few short spaces to fill in to give a continuous walk from the business part of town to the west end of Dr. Camp's place, formerly the Buck property.

KISS COSTS $25.

Kisses at $25 per kiss are not so cheap when the kisser must work out the $25 on the rock pile, also know, feeling as hilarious as his first name, attempted to kiss a Mexican girl a kiss Saturday on South Stanton street and drew a fine of $25 from Judge Lea in police court for his nerve.

FOR A TONIC NOTHING EQUALS S.S.S.

The need of a tonic in the Spring is almost universally recognized. We have learned that a weakened, run-down system means more than "Spring Fever," as we are accustomed to refer to the physical disturbances which come at this season. Bodily fatigue, fickle appetite, poor digestion, nervousness, lack of energy, etc., prove that the proper amount of nourishment is not being supplied to the body through the circulation. The stomach, bowels and digestive members are sluggish from lack of stimulating nutrition, and in consequence the entire body suffers from the effects of a poorly nourished constitution.

The recognized importance of pure blood in preserving health emphasizes the danger of a weakened circulation. The use of a real blood-purifying tonic when the system is deranged from lack of nourishment, will often prevent the development of some serious sickness, because weak systems cannot resist disease, while healthy, well nourished constitutions are able to ward it off. No medicine is of value as a tonic except one which purifies and enriches the blood, for until this is done the body will not receive its required stimulus and disease-resisting powers.

S. S. S. is the best Spring tonic because of its genuine ability and worth as a blood purifier. It builds up the depleted system in the true way, by purifying the blood and supplying an increased amount of nourishment to every portion of the body. S. S. S. removes all accumulations and impurities from the circulation, enriches the blood, and overcomes the unpleasant physical ailments that afflict at Spring time. It aids and improves the appetite, reinvigorates every fibre and tissue of the body and imparts healthful energy to all who are run down. S. S. S. is for sale at drug stores.

"No; it isn't. But that was about what I expected you to say. Now hear my side of it. If you don't clean house—you and the other officials of the company—I shall not only resign; I shall take the field on the other side and tell what I know."

I have been telling everybody that this is to be a campaign of publicity. I shall keep my word."

"Oh, you would not do that!" protested Gantry, now thoroughly alarmed. "You know too much—a great deal too much!"

Blount got up and relighted his cigar with a match taken from the traffic manager's desk box.

"It's up to you," he said, with his hand on the doorknob. "Get into communication with whatever powers that be there are that can give the necessary orders and see to it that the orders are given and that they are put in the way of being carried out. Dick, I mean what I say. It's a clean sheet—or an exposure that will make a lot of you wish that you had never been born."

"Hold on—one question before you go, Evan," pleaded Gantry, "and give me a straight answer. Is this another move of the honorable—or your father's?"

Blount's smile was as grim as any that Gantry had ever seen on the face of the Honorable David.

"My father is much more likely to take sides with you, I am sorry to say. No, Dick; you've got only one man to fight, but you mustn't forget that his name also is Blount. Go to it and send me word and let the first word be that you have scotched the head of this lumber company snake. That's all for today. Goodbye."

Returning to his office in Temple court, Blount found that the morning mail had been busy with him also. There were three invitations from widely separated cities in the state, all based upon the newspaper reports of his Ophir speech, and the afternoon mail brought three more.

It was evident that the campaign of education had struck a popular chord, and the young political manager saw what a miraculous opportunity was opening for the railroad if only the "powers" that Gantry had refused to name could be brought enough and high minded enough to seize it.

After that for three weeks Blount scarcely saw his office in the capital. One appointment followed another in rapid succession, and everywhere there was a repetition of the welcome extended by the Ophir miners—a cordial welcome, generous applause and kindly hospitality at every turn.

It was not until he was deep into the fourth week of the hurrying to and fro that he began to admit a suspicion which grew like a juggler's rose when he had once given it place. These invitations, which were now coming from all parts of the state—could it be possible that they were all spontaneous? And if they were not—

If they were so many subtle moves in the great game he could see no possible end to be subserved by them save one—they were effectually keeping him away from the capital, which was the nucleus and center of the campaign activities.

Was there something going on at headquarters that "the powers" did not wish him to find out? Of one thing he was fairly well assured—Gantry was dodging him, was apparently keeping an accurate record of his movements, for whenever the hurrying to and fro permitted a flying visit to the capital Gantry was always out of town.

With the awakening suspicion came a rapid putting together of two and two. Wherever he went there was always the same pressing hospitality, with many urgings to delay his going. At the same time it became evident in many little ways that he was in reality merely skimming over the surface in his campaign work.

That a hot political fight was going on all around him he could not doubt. The newspapers were full of it, and in many sections of the state the fight had become acrimonious and bitter. But, although he was supposed to be in the fight, it began to be apparent that he was little more than an on-looker when it came to the really vital struggle of the moment.

It was as if everything had been carefully prearranged, like a sort of triumphal procession. None the less the invisible barrier, the barrier which was shutting him out from the inner workings of the campaign, was there, and he could neither surmount it nor push it aside.

Notwithstanding the hard work and the hard traveling he was doing he did not let the missionary effort outweigh the sturdier purpose, which was to hold his principals rigidly up to the mirror of a vigilant watchfulness.

Arguing that the opposition newspapers would be quick to seize upon any charge of corruption involving the railroad company, he read them faithfully. As yet there had been nothing more than spiteful innuendoes and a raking over of past misdeeds, though many of the editors were charging a secret alliance between his father and McVicker and warning their readers to look out for startling developments later on.

Not content with mere watchfulness, however, Blount got his finger upon the pulse of occasions whenever he could. On his brief stopovers in the capital he kept his eyes and ears open for the earliest hint of any charge of chicanery, and though he was unable to get hold of Gantry personally, he kept up a steady fire of letters and telegrams, all pointing to the same end—absolute and utter good faith and the upholding of his hands in the public plea for a square deal.

To these the traffic manager replied guardedly, but optimistically. The management was delighted with the good work done and doing by the new division counsel; public opinion was slowly but surely changing; it would be a landslide election, and Blount could take credit for his due.

In all this Blount did not fail to remark that there was never anything said about the Hathaway bargain, and the omission made him the more watchful. A little investigation unearthed other and similar bargains made in the past.

For example, there was a practical and very effective irrigation trust, an alliance, offensive and defensive, of the big irrigation companies. Controlling the water under proprietary rights, as most of them did, these companies could influence many votes among the beneficiary farmers. Land deals in the past with the railroad company had been the basis for corruption here, and, with the electric power people, preferential freight rates had been traded for the votes of employees, as with Hathaway.

Some of these special rates were still in force, as the quiet investigation on the ground developed, whereupon Blount's communications to Gantry took on a more emphatic tone. The tariffs must be revised and one of two things must be done—either the preferential of the favored corporations must be withdrawn or the public rates must be leveled down to meet the specials.

It was on a second speechmaking visit to Ophir that Blount had his first face to face chance at the traffic manager after the opening of the correspondence battle.

A meeting of the Mine Owners' association, moving for a readjustment of the classification on copper matte and bullion at a time when the railroad company might be supposed to be on the giving hand, took Gantry to the great camp in the Carmadine hills, and the first man he met at the hotel was the new dictator of policies for the Transcontinental company.

"Made a mistake, didn't you, Dick, coming while I was here?" said the reformer, with a very life-like replica of his father's grim smile. "I suppose you've got an immediate engagement to go somewhere or see somebody."

"No; I wish I had," was the hearty admission. "Say, Evan, you are getting to be a perfect nightmare with your letters and telegrams. You've got me so I'm afraid to open my desk. Why can't you let well enough alone? You haven't heard of any skullduggery lately, have you?"

"Nothing new, no. But a housecleaning is supposed to take down all the old cobwebs. Those preferential rates for United Electric and the Sitwah Land and Improvement."

"Heavens and earth! You call yourself a lawyer, and yet you ask us to set aside promises that are or ought to be as binding as so many written contracts, with penal attachments! It can't be done, Evan—that's all there is to it; it can't be done."

"Can't go out of the window when 'must' comes in at the door, Dick. I've been digging into the records, and I have evidence enough to turn the people of this state into a mob that will tear up your tracks if I should publish it."
